

A Dream Called Home: A Memoir of Loss, Love, and Finding Your Way

In the wake of Hurricane Katrina, Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist Isabel Wilkerson found herself displaced from her home in New Orleans. In her new memoir, A Dream Called Home, she tells the story of her journey to find a sense of belonging and home after the storm.

Wilkerson's story is both personal and universal. She writes about the loss of her home, her family, and her community. But she also writes about the hope and resilience that she found in the aftermath of the storm. She writes about the strangers who became her family, the friends who helped her rebuild her life, and the community that she found in a new city.
