Peltier's memoir begins with her childhood in a small town in North Dakota. She was raised by an abusive father and a neglectful mother, and she was often left alone to fend for herself. As a result, she developed a vivid imagination and a strong sense of independence. She also began to experience strange and disturbing events, which she attributed to the unseen world.

As Peltier grew older, her experiences with the supernatural became more intense. She began to see ghosts, hear voices, and feel the presence of unseen beings. She also began to have visions of a dark and dangerous world that existed just beyond our own. Peltier's experiences frightened her, but they also fascinated her. She began to explore the unseen world, and she eventually came to believe that it was a real and powerful place.

Peltier's memoir is a deeply personal account of her experiences with trauma, survival, and the supernatural. She writes with raw honesty about the horrors she has witnessed and the challenges she has faced. However, she also writes with hope and resilience. She believes that even in the darkest of times, there is always light to be found.
