

My Life with Peter Cook and Dudley Moore: A Wild and Wacky Adventure

I first met Peter Cook and Dudley Moore in 1967, when I was working as a secretary at the BBC. They were two of the most famous comedians in the world, and I was a huge fan. I never dreamed that I would one day become their friend.

But that's exactly what happened. Over the next few years, I spent a lot of time with Peter and Dudley. I went to their parties, I traveled with them on tour, and I even lived with them for a while. I got to know them both very well, and I learned a lot about their lives and their work.

Peter was a brilliant comedian, but he was also a very troubled man. He was an alcoholic and a drug addict, and he often struggled with depression. Dudley was a much more stable and reliable person, but he also had his demons. He was a workaholic, and he often put his career ahead of his personal life.

Despite their differences, Peter and Dudley were best friends. They were two halves of a whole, and they needed each other to survive. They were also two of the funniest people I have ever met. I laughed until my sides hurt every time I was with them.

I learned a lot from Peter and Dudley. I learned about the importance of laughter, I learned about the dangers of addiction, and I learned about the power of friendship. I also learned a lot about myself. I realized that I was a stronger and more resilient person than I thought I was.

My friendship with Peter and Dudley was one of the most important experiences of my life. It taught me a lot about myself and about the world. I am forever grateful for the time I spent with them.
