The Warrens are a patriotic family who believe in the American Dream. They are proud of their country and they support the government's efforts to fight communism. The Petersons, on the other hand, are a more skeptical family. They don't believe that the threat of communism is as great as the government makes it out to be. They are also concerned about the government's increasing use of fear and intimidation to silence dissent.

As the Cold War intensifies, the tension between the Warrens and the Petersons grows. The Warrens begin to suspect that the Petersons are communists. The Petersons, in turn, begin to fear that the Warrens are going to turn them in to the government.

The Cold War on Maplewood Street is a haunting and atmospheric young adult novel that explores the themes of fear, paranoia, and the dangers of McCarthyism. It is a coming-of-age story that examines the impact of fear and paranoia on young people.
